Nearly 22,000 households in NYC were evicted in 2015, and a much larger number gave up their homes under the threat of eviction. New Yorkers forced out of their homes face a housing market that leaves them with few options – they are left homeless or in more expensive housing than they left. While 27% of tenants have attorneys in Housing Court, the vast majority don't, making Housing Court a center of displacement and eviction, and a key tool for landlords to drive displacement and speculation.

Intro. 214-A (Right to Counsel) would provide attorneys for tenants and homeowners who are facing eviction and foreclosure in Housing Court and who make 200% of the poverty line or below ($48,500 for a family of 4). While 42 sponsors have signed on to support the bill, and there was unanimous support for the bill at a hearing in September, the bill has yet to come to a vote. Every day without a right to counsel, is a day with unjust evictions.
